

JANUARY 2015

VOGUE

FOREVER YOURS

In the depths of winter, Vladimir Kanevsky offers a reminder of summer's bounty with a collection of alpine flowers made of handmade porcelain and copper, sold exclusively at New York's Neue Galerie. "I see them as memento mori," museum director Renée Price says of the pieces, which start as sketches based on botanical charts and grow into delicate- and long lasting- blooms. MIEKE TEN HAVE